

PEOPLE LIKE ME

STORIES YOU CAN RELATE TO

Herald-Leader readers like to look in on the lives of “people like me,” perhaps your next-door neighbor or a resident of a nearby town. We all like to see ourselves in the paper.

To that end, food writer Sharon Thompson introduces you to chefs, farmers and short-order cooks in Sunday’s A La Carte. In recent editions, you enjoyed the flavor of life on a Pine Grove chicken farm, a collection of memories in Mother’s Day recipes and bushels of taste in a Bourbon County orchard.

Or how about Saturday’s Faith & Values? You met a Stanford man who crafted a personal tribute to the Ten Commandments, a group of traveling carpenters who hammered home their faith on a Midway building site and a Lexington couple who turned to prayer to save their infant.

Also, Business Monday readers relate to the Kentuckians profiled in “Workspaces” – whether their space is a fast-food drive-thru, bike shop or home – and noted in “Personnel File,” those folks who have been promoted within their companies or are moving to another company.

We enjoy bringing you stories about “people like me” so you can enjoy reading about their skills, accomplishments and daily endeavors. After all, it’s all about Kentuckians, people you know, people like you.
